

United Swallow Club

BULLETIN FOR THE SPRING & SUMMER OF 1989

FROM THE SEC.

Gary Romig

This bulletin is quite full of information. It has taken several weeks to put this one together. The breeder survey is of great interest as it gives us a general indication of the population of our Swallows. Blue and Black, white bar Fairy Swallows are by far the most popular of Swallow varieties. There are probably many more in the country than the survey indicates because of course many non members have them. Interestingly there were no crested, spot marked or fullhead marked clean legged Swallows. Surprising to see Red Barless Fullheads way up there.

The Standard survey indicates that 11 wanted a new standard. 4 exactly like the German standard, 10 loosely based on the German standard 2 were satisfied with the current standard

The show season is rapidly approaching. We will be represented at the national young bird show. Many members will be attending.

Eastern District meet at Reading

Ron DeClement

This year marked the 100th anniversary of the Reading Pigeon Association's annual show. The combined entries for the show once again numbered near 3,000 birds. As part of the 100th year celebration, a very splendid dinner was served Saturday evening. Steve and his wife, Linda, Marsha and I attended the dinner and had a very enjoyable evening. Following dinner, a Grand Champion of the show was selected by a panel of judges. This was not done previously and proved to be a highlight of the show. We were proud to see Marsha's blue white barred Fairy Swallow as one of the top seven varieties in the final judging after the others had been eliminated. A very fine old white Fantail cock went on to win. Marsha enjoyed a great show winning both Champion and Reserve Champion Swallow in the club meet and Champion Spot in the Rare Breeds Club meet. I would say that Marsha has the year off to a very good start. Merle Starr did a very thorough job of judging once again. He carefully examined each bird and made written comments on the judging cards. The members exhibiting Swallows were Steve Ripper, Fred Merklinger, Marsha Walston and myself.

The following excerpt on the Swallow also includes the general section that the author used to describe all the German toys or Color Pigeons.

The First English Language Description of the Swallow.

From THE PIGEON BOOK

By B. P. Brent

Published in 1871

TOY PIGEONS

Under this head I shall include all those varieties of domestic Pigeons whose value consists in their beautiful plumage and accurate marking, feather being their only property; and if this property is lost they at once lose caste, and become nothing more than mere mongrels. They appear to owe their origin principally to the Dovehouse Pigeon, and in some cases to crosses from the fancy varieties previously described. Many of them have turned crowns, and others feathered feet; but these additions are only rarely constant in the variety. Very little attention has been bestowed on them in this country, though a few of the varieties have been long known and are widely diffused, while others are local or of recent introduction. I have failed in an endeavour to classify them in any regular order. The German writer, Gottlob Neumeister classes them as white Pigeons and dark markings, and dark ones with white marks; and as colour is their only property, this would be a good method were it not that we find Pigeons reversing this arrangement, that cannot properly be separated; therefore I think it best to leave classification out of the question, or rather enumerate all I know of in one division as Toys. Many of them are very beautiful in plumage. Most of them are good breeders, and well adapted to the country amateur who wishes to have a stock of pretty and productive Pigeons, in which he can keep us a standard of excellence without giving himself much trouble about the more particular points of the higher fancy kinds. A mere tyro can select the more correctly marked birds as stock, and appropriate the remainder to the cuisine.

Variety 14— THE TERN, OR SEA-SWALLOW

(Columba Sterna Hirundo)

French Pigeon Hironnelle.

German Die Schwalben Taube.

This beautiful variety of Toy Pigeon is much esteemed in Germany, where a great variety is bred. In France they are also known. They have recently been introduced into England; and are now frequently to be obtained. They are generally called Swallows; which name they derive from the Tern (Sterna Hirundo), a small species of Gull, which is also called the Sea-Swallow. Hence their common name of Swallow Pigeons; by which they are known in Germany, France, and this country.

These Pigeons are slightly larger than the Dovehouse Pigeon which they much resemble in general form and character. There is, however, much diversity in their appendages; for some are smooth-headed, while others have fine broad-turned crowns. A few are clean-footed. They are swift and active on the wing; but owing to their large slippers, the majority are not well adapted to provide for themselves in the fields.

As to plumage, the top of the head, the wings, and the slippers of such as are feather-footed, are coloured; the rest of the plumage being white.

The upper mandible is darker than the lower. the top of the head must be evenly coloured down to a line from the corners of the mouth, across the eye, and evenly round the back of the head; or in such as have turned crowns, quite up to the crest, the hood being perfectly white.

Respecting the wings— they must be wholly coloured; but the scapular feathers that overly the shoulders are white, giving the coloured wings a narrow appearance, which is regarded as a point of much importance.

The feet, or slippers, are coloured only from the heel, or hock-joint, downwards; the trousers, or feathers, hanging down; the legs, or thighs, being white.

The coloured parts are of various shades. The Black Swallows have the markings of a fine, glossy, velvety black. The blues are also with black bars across the wing; or of a light blue, without bars at all: and others have the coloured parts red, yellow, dun, or mealy. All the principal colours are occasionally bred with white wing-bars, and I believe, are occasionally bred with spangled shoulders; but these are rare, and the divisions of colours are not often so regular as the others.

There is a sub-variety bred much smaller, with fine broad hoods and their short legs heavily feathered, which are highly prized in Germany, and considered quite the high fancy in the way of Swallow Pigeons.

MM. Boitard and Corbie, the French writers on Pigeons. seem to have regarded these lesser Terns as a variety of the Carmelites, on account of their diminutive size; but a reference to the plates will show the diversity of marking, which is the only property the Toys can boast. I believe these small Swallow Pigeons are not bred of so many colours as the larger varieties. The German name of "Feen Tauben" or Fairy Pigeons. seems very appropriate to these dwarf Toys.

BREEDER SURVEY

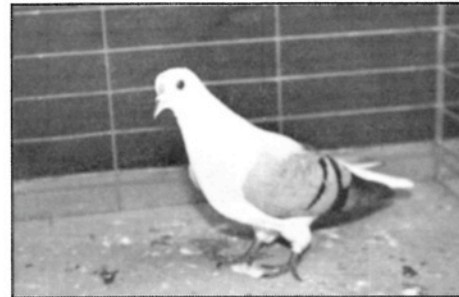

The response to our breeder survey was adequate but lacking responses from some major breeders. There is of course time to send in your response if you have not. There are many Swallow varieties that we just don't know about (if they exist in the U.S or not). The survey does give an indication of the popularity of varieties. As I thought Black and Blue White bar Fairy Swallows out number any other colors by far.

The codes in the breeders list are as follows:
